House Again Without a Quorum of Democrats.

Soutelle Tries New Tactics and Crisp Crushes Him.

New Absentees Enough to Make Up for Fresh Arrivals.

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.-There was determination in the eyes of the Democratic managers when the House met this morning. After three days' efforts to get the Tariff bill up for consideration, which falled on account of Demo cratic absenteeism and the disaffection of a few members, they believed that the decree of King Caucus would bring the recalcitrants into line and afford the coveted quorum. But although several additional Demo crats had arrived during the night, almost as many had been called away on business, and despite the seeming confidence of the managers, the outlook was Among those who went home last night were Messrs. Cadmus and Cornish, of New Jersey, and Sickles, of New York. Messrs. Cadmus and Sickles entertain objections to certain features of the Wilson bill.

Immediately after the reading of th Journal Mr. Catchings called up the report of the Committee on Rules, while Mr. Boutelle was clamoring for recognition on the ground that he rose to a question of privilege.

The Speaker sought to ignore him, bu he was so persistent that he was finally recognized. He said ne desired to call up his Hawaiian resolution, and explained that he made the point that while both questions were privileged, his resolution, involving the rights and dignity of the House, was of higher privilege than a mere report, which related only to parliamentary proceedure.

He drew the distinction clearly between a privileged question and a question of privilege on reading rules and asked for aruling of the Chair.

Ex-Speaker Reed, who was on the floor, interposed to say that he hoped Mr. Boutelle's objection would be given full consideration and its correct determination was important for the orderly ceding of the House. Boutelle then, in conclusion, maintained that his resolution having been declared privileged, and not having been dispose was still before the House and had been before the House for the last three

Smith says he has a clue, however, but he has said the same thing every day for a week.

In speaking of this new clue he rejuctantly admitted that he didn't think it amounted to much. It is rumored that the brand-new clue is a discovery of the name of the man who was last known to be with Miss Barrowcliffe. This gentleman is no doubt under surveillance, but in addition to that nothing is known. It is clear that the police have abandoned the theory of Miss Barrowcliffe's friends that her assailant was a tramp and are working exclusively on Supt. Smith's own theory that he was an acquaintance.

At the hospital this morning it was stated that Miss Barrowcliffe was improving physically, but nothing would be said of her mental condition.

John Vernon, the professor of music with whom Miss Barrowcliffe and Miss Dexter, her friend, boarded, was emphatic this morning in denying that he is withholding important information. He characterized a report that he came to this country as a cook and married the woman that employed him as a lie, and incidentally added that the statement to the effect that he thought a great deal of Miss Barrowcliffe, but a great deal more of Miss Dexter, was equally false.

Mr. Vernon also said that he didn't believe the young ladies intended leaving his house because things were unpleasant there. With regard to the police theory that Miss Barrowcliffe's assailant was a friend, Mr. Vernon said he did not know of any one he could suspect, but he said that he did not know all her acquaintances.

Judge Werner, Special County Judge Kinney and George A. Benton, who was District-Attorney when Leddy was sentenced, have all signed the petition to Gov. Flower to pardon Leddy. Mr. Benton says in his letter that had he thought that Leddy would have reached Auburn he would have accepted a plea of guilty to a minor offense, as the hat Leddy secured on the order was worth at the most only $3.

Gov. Flower said this morning: "I shall probably take early action in Leddy's case, and yet it is only one of sixty or seventy of these reformatory cases now before me, and every one just as much an outrage upon justice as this one evidently is.

"The reformatory officers say that they only send these people to the State prisons to make room. The facts are that in three years over five hundred have been transferred, and of that number only one returned to Emira.

"I can only repeat what I said to the Legislature, that the transfer system is a gross injustice and, in my judgment, should be altogether abolished, or else so far modified to prohibit abuse."

played its colors at half mast as soon as the news of Col Hincken's death became known.

Col. Edward Hincken was born in London in Isl3, and came to America when a child. He became an employee of Ship Broker Boyd in the early thirties, and was associated with him in business for sixty years. He was President of the old Merchants' Association and News Association, which was consolidated with the Maritime Exchange in 1873. He was a member of the Maritime and Produce Exchanges, and of the Chamber of Commerce, and Trustee of the Bowery Savings Bank.

In 1837 he became the junior partner in the firm of Boyd & Hincken, which continued as one of the best known firms in the West India trade for 64 years. In 1891 Mr. Boyd retired from the firm, and Cort. Hincken, a son of Col. Hincken joined his father under the firm title of Edward Hincken & Son.

Col. Hincken was stricken with paralysis Sunday, while viaiting in New York, and never suffered much illness in his life. He had been in failing health for a long time, but visited his office at 3 William street nearly every day, and attended to his business on the Produce Exchange. He was at his business last Saturday.

The figure of Col. Hincken was well known to everybody on 'Change, Although weighted down with fourscore years of age, Col. Hincken's carriage was erect, his shoulders broad, his bronzed face frank and full of kindliness.

Four families lived in the house, and they were all hurried out without injury. James Foy, son of the owner of the building, lived directly over the store. His three children were carried down in safety by J. F. McKernan, an ex-fireman, of 2817 Third avenue. After the fire had reached to the top floor of 2820 the flames communicated to the cornice of 2618, and the top floor of that building, which is also wood, was burned out. The flames, however, gained no sort of headway, and after an hour's work by the firemen the fire was under control.

Mr. Foy does not know how the explosion occurred. A gas jet was burning while he was in the cellar, but he said he turned it out when he left the cellar for the floor above.

Mr. Foy said his stock was valued at $9,000, and was a total loss. The loss on the building is about $8,000. The insurance on both building' and stock was about $7,000.

Willoughby has been a sailor, having for years served on board a new Bedford whaler. He is also a man not given to telling "ghost" stories. It was $.57 o'clock this morning. according to Willoughby's story, when he was on the front platform of his car going east, near the foot of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. Randall's Island makes the river narrow at that point, and as a great black object slowly moved through the water at a six mile-an-hour rait he recognized it at once as a whale. He says it was of the length stated and that its head was fully ten feet long. He shouted to the conductor, R. H. Hamiin, and Edward Maylash, monitor of the cable road, as well as Starter George Tarr. All looked for the whale and Tarr says he was just in time to see the monster's tail.

"When I first saw the whale," said Willoughby afterwards, "it was near the middle of the river, going down stream, I could not be mistaken. I have seen hundreds of them."

The police who investgated the story do not take kindly to the yarn. They could find nothing to substantiate it, for the reason that the whale had probably become impatient and moved away, It was also called to mind that a few days age an upturned canal-boat was found near that place.
